Feedback/ Action	Source of Feedback	Action taken or to be completed
The current structure of incorporating the environment into the introduction section does not flow and gives a sense of this not being as important as other aspects of well-being	Welsh Government	The rationale behind this is to demonstrate that the environment underpins everything that we do and we see it as setting the context for other sections where the environment is then further referenced. We deliberately avoided using the well-being themes in order to try and create a more cross cutting approach and this is why the environment is not it's own section outright but rather underpins the others, similar to the way our population is a core part of the assessment and comes first. NRW have really liked the approach taken and have been pleased to see it given importance at the beginning of the document and then woven throughout the other sections so we are minded to retain the current structure
Consider underaking engagement through schools	Welsh Government	The results of the 'super' survey undertaken throughout schools in the Vale are now available. There has been over 1000 responses from children and young people and we included some of the same questions we used in our 'Let's Talk' survey undertaken with adults last summer. Results have been incorporated into the assessment
Welsh Government Policy Experts have suggested several areas for further development including the impacts of health on employment and evidence in relation to road traffic volumes	Welsh Government	These suggestions have been added to the sections outlining where we need to increase our evidence base as they are not considered urgent at this stage
Further analysis in relation to future trends	Welsh Government/ Future Generations Commissioner	This is seen as ongoing work that will enhance the assessment in the longer term and as part of the development of the plan. This is recognised as an issue nationally. WG will publish the Future Trends Report in May 2017
More evidence in relation to cultural well-being	Welsh Government/ Future Generations Commissioner	This is recognised as a gap and an area where there is a lack of evidence/ data. References will be added to the overview document where possible but this is ongoing work for the longer term.
Greater explanation of how issues impact on or contribute to the National Goals	Future Generations Commissioner	This has been added to the overview and executive summary documents
