Historic Hedgerows

Plate 1: Looking north-west across the study site from the western boundary.

Plate 2: Looking south-west across the study site from the eastern boundary.

Plate 3: Looking north-east towards Model Farm from the south-western corner of the study site. This photo shows the gently undulating topography of the study site.

Plate 4: Looking south-west across the study site from the east side of the Whitelands Brook.

Plate 5: Looking north across the study site from close to the confluence of the Bullhouse and Whitelands Brooks

Plate 6: Looking south across the study site from the centre of the northern boundary (directly towards The Bulwarks Scheduled Monument). The long line of trees marks the railway line, which forms a strong boundary to views in this direction.

Plate 7: Looking south towards The Bulwarks scheduled monument, from 250m north of the railway line, illustrating how the tree belt along the railway line encloses any views to (or from) the hillfort.

Plate 8: Looking north across the study site from the same position as Plate 6, 450m beyond the southern boundary of the study site.
